Expansive praise for Kekkonen in Moscow press on eve of Khrushchev visit gives prominence to his support of "peaceful co-existence," and includes one possibly significant reference to his December 7, 1943 Stockholm mention of possible participation common security system with USSR. General context is flattering discussion his role in strengthening Soviet-Finnish ties. PRAVDA (September 2) describes him as "great statesman and diplomat whose activity directed to transforming idea co-existence into life," and proudly notes Finland's new importance in international affairs as member UN and Nordic country.

Although no definitive statement made on concrete results to be expected of Khrushchev visit, press treatment appears build up for signing some accord further binding Finland to USSR in field foreign policy, or military, or both.
